“The room felt alive, emotional, and there was a collective sense of vulnerability ... a shift in the way our students think about violence against women ... many of them opened up about their stories ... for the first time. Students continue to mention [the] presentation ... the impact [it] had ... many [felt] empowered to change the way they respond to violence and hopeful for a future where women DON’T experience sexual assault/abuse. The idea that we can truly forgive anyone was new for many students, and they were inspired ... to see love in a horrible situation. This message is for everyone.”

“ ... one of the only [presentations] I've ever participated in where every student, from the best behaved to the most antsy and distractible, was fully engaged. It was wonderful to see our students truly moved [and] feel empathy ... so important for our teens to practice ... every school would benefit .”
